THE PIOUS ROBBER. During my twenty-five years of acnal service as detective, I have found many who have stolen the livery of Heaven to serve the devil in. One morning I stepped in Chief taken. Matsell's office, having just returned from the West, when I was accosted by the chief: "Hullo, Harry! glad to see you;

here is work ahead." "What's up now? another murder?" exclaimed. "No, it's a robbery ; or, as I should say, a series of robberies."

"Where away?" "Bond Street." "What, not on Bond street!"

ries being committed on that particular street. "Yes, Harry, this is the tenth robbery there inside of two weeks," replied Chief Matsell.

"Can it be fathomed?" no one to work it up." "Where's Bolt and Knight?"

"On that murder case in Newark." " And Charley Ross?" "He has just fluished the Chatterton forgery case, and is expected here to-morrow. So Howard, you will have to work up this case." "I'll try it, but cannot go to work till morning, for I must rest." "All right," returned the chief, and upon his face. "Who was visited last night?" "Mrs. Durant, the Irish widow.-She was here this morning, and said that she had been robbed of valuables amounting to over five thousand dollars." GRAHAM FLOUR "Whew!" I exclaimed. "That was a big haul."

"Now, Howard, you had better go and examine the scene of the robbery, and do as you think best. I left the office and ere long stood upon the marble steps of Mrs. Durant's stone front. A servant bade me enter, and I was conducted to the parlor, where I found the widow up and drew her hand across her eyes. "I am Harry Howard," I said, by vay of introduction. "Mr. Howard, the detective?" "The same, Madam."

"You come to investigate the robbery, do you not?" "I do. I would like to see the which he will deliver to those in want of the same at reasonable rates, by the gallon or harrel.
